And it came to pass that his wife said to him: He should learn some trade, for when he is separated from thee, what will he do if he is left ignorant like thee? The wife importuned him; she gave him no rest. So the peasant took his child, and went to seek a master for him. On the way they were thirsty. He saw a rivulet, drank eagerly till his thirst was quenched, and when he lifted up his head he cried out: Ah! how good thou art!1 On saying this, there came forth from the water a devil in the form of a man, and said to the peasant: What dost thou want, O man! I am Vakhraca; what troubles thee? The peasant told him all his story. The devil, when he learnt this, said: Give me this son of thine: I will teach him for one year, then come hither; if thou knowest him, it is well, he will go with thee; if not, he is mine and mine alone, he shall be lost to thee.
